Hardware Updates and Vids

But firstly, a short video showing Dada exploring the LSe instrument.
I should mention that she's not a musician.
What I loved here is how naturally she started using movements inspired by traditional Thai dance.
It immediately became something different from how I usually play it.
I always enjoy seeing how new people approach this instrument - everyone discovers something different.

LSe - another milestones reached
(final final final version)
I finally implemented dynamic patch swapping in Pure Data
(fancy way of saying that I can now load different sound patches while LSe is running).
This will result in simpler design, less components, less CPU load and more flexibility!
I know I said this before… but it really feels like the final version (almost).
I also finally figured out all the open source licensing stuff and it looks like I am allowed to sell LSe!
I've just made a repository on GitHub. I will be taking preorders soon (just kidding).

µ-LSe on my Etsy store

The µ-LSe (micro Light Sequencer) is now available on Etsy.
• DIY kits
• fully assembled units
More modules and variations coming soon.
You can build your own µ-LSe during one of the upcoming workshops - or order it as a DIY kit.

Mu-Sick Glich Boxes: still available!

Musick

My track Devil's Music on Antilounge VA compilation
New album is slowly cooking. This time no beats, but drones!

Usual (Social Media) Rant!

Every time I post on mainstream social media I feel like I'm collaborating with the enemy - platforms that monetize our friendships while actively tearing society apart.
So after procrastinating for a long time I finally opened a Mastodon account.
Slowly migrating there. Deleting the Facebook artist page next.

That's it for today!
More noise soon.
Stay weird!
